

SAVE THE DATE!!!

The Institute on Communication and Inclusion at Syracuse University is pleased to announce.....

The 2011 Summer Institute will be held from Wednesday, July 20th – Friday, July 22nd at the MIT Media Lab on the campus of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge, Mass.

This three-day event focused on research, practice and advocacy for individuals who type to communicate will focus on the theme of “Finding a Voice, Finding a Place, Finding a Purpose” and will feature keynotes and presentations from individuals who type to communicate and leaders in the field of communication and inclusion from around the US and the world.

Each day will feature a keynote address followed by breakout sessions on a variety of topics including:

- developing greater independence in communication
- school and community inclusion
- finding a voice
- navigating higher education
- sustaining support for communication.
- the role of art and music in the conceptualization of voice.

This conference will be ideal for individuals with disabilities who type to communicate, facilitators, teachers, researchers and advocates. Look for more details and the registration brochure in a few weeks. But, be sure to get these dates on your calendar and join us in Cambridge for this amazing institute.
